No matter what the landscape in Portland proper is like these days, the city remains Oregon’s top tourism driver.

So reports Travel Oregon, which, as demonstrated in the various charts on these two pages, spells out the degree to which the Rose City affects our robust, if pandemic-hampered, visitor economy. Some 38% of the dollars that tourism contributes to Oregon’s economy are spent in the Portland region.

The $5.4 billion spent in Portland represents a healthy chunk of change for a region constantly in need of tax revenue, positive public image reinforcement and, just as important, jobs. While the Oregon picture remains positive overall, it’s instructive to compare the local figures to our national peers.

The Travel Oregon Economic Impact of Travel report, released last week, indicates that the travel sector absorbed huge hits due to the pandemic. Total travel spending dropped by 47% between year-end 2019 and 2020.

Only last year did the recovery begin resembling the pre-Covid days, with travel spending jumping by 4% over 2022 and actually beating 2019’s overall travel spending by 7% (when adjusted for inflation, it’s actually just 0.5% higher over the last five years).

Here are some of the numbers behind the state's tourism economy.
